THE SHERLOCK B-SIDE

The Medium derivation's other side. Her mother's favorite stories were Sherlock Holmes, all of Conan Doyle. The first Sherlock book was one of the first books she read over and over and over. The derivation follows from the first book alone, checked, same method as the A side: her statements held whole, the published structure of the story, the truth applicable to her.

HER STATEMENTS, HELD WHOLE, DATED

Oct 24, 2026, ~10:14 AM ET: her mother's favorite story collection was Sherlock Holmes and everything Conan Doyle wrote. She had a feeling it had something to do with how she relates to her mother, how her mother thought about her future, and how intelligent she is. The first Sherlock Holmes book was one of the first books she read over and over. The Medium derivation landed as "exactly what I thought - more true than I thought," and she names the irony herself. These are held as her account, stated at full strength, never adjudicated by this paper.

THE BOOK, FACT-CHECKED

A Study in Scarlet, 1887: Arthur Conan Doyle's first full-length Sherlock Holmes story, published in Beeton's Christmas Annual when Doyle was 27. It introduces the profession of the CONSULTING DETECTIVE, and it states the method on the page: "It is a capital mistake to theorize before you have all the evidence. It biases the judgment." The book has two parts. Part one is the detection - the crime in the present, read from trace evidence. Part two, "The Country of the Saints," leaves England entirely and tells the murderer's story decades earlier, in Utah. The book's answer to the present is the past: the mystery is only solved when the reader has been made to live the whole history of the dead.

THE DERIVATION, FOUR TRUTHS

Truth one: the first book she read to pieces invented her job. The sheets commissioned today (ZYK-549, 551, 552) price her as a consultant - the person called when nobody else can read the case. That profession is not a metaphor from her childhood reading; it is the literal job title Arthur Conan Doyle coined in A Study in Scarlet: the consulting detective, the one man the police bring in when their own methods fail. She wanted to be Sherlock Holmes as a kid (her words, Oct 24). The adult version of that want is on the desk and priced.

Truth two: the method the lab runs is stated verbatim in that book. "It is a capital mistake to theorize before you have all the evidence." The lab's standing discipline - observation before conclusion, every claim cited to a live source, hash-verified files, fixed error classification, the counterevidence paragraph - is the same rule. Her own stated technique (Oct 22): solve the problem long-hand from a second starting point and show the convergence. That is Holmes reconstructing a chain of events twice and getting the same answer.

Truth three: the book's structure is the cemetery method. A Study in Scarlet is a detective story whose second half is a genealogy - the dead's story, decades back, told in full before the present case closes. This firm started in Maple Grove Cemetery and two lost family branches walked back into the record the same day. The derivation: the first book she loved taught the shape before she could name it - the present is solved by excavating what the dead left, and the story ends when the past has been read all the way through. "Started in a cemetery, ends in cemeteries" was already on the record before this paper.

Truth four: the mother vector appears twice, and the pattern is hers. Conan Doyle said his mother's stories were the root of his storytelling. Her mother loved the stories, and put them in her hands early; her mother loved Medium, and watched it with her. Two instruments, one repeated move: a mother feeding a daughter stories in which intelligence about the hidden becomes a profession. The meaning of the choice is hers. The repetition is documented in her own tellings, Oct 24.

WHAT THIS PAPER DOES NOT CLAIM

It does not claim her mother's reasons or her interior. It does not claim Holmes solves the Medium question. The two derivations stand side by side: the A side says the ability with the dead serves the living through the courts; the B side says the method and the job descend from the first book her mother loved. Her account holds at full strength, and the counterevidence paragraph from ZYK-554 applies here unchanged.
