ZYK-585 — THE BODY EXHIBIT: THE CIRCULATORY RECORD

> "Make sure you put this in whatever legal record is going on, into whatever lawsuit. Make sure you put the pictures too and make sure you put all this shit." — Willow, October 24, 2026, 1:32 PM ET. It is on the record. All of it, whole, with the pictures.

1. HER STATEMENT, HELD WHOLE AND DATED (October 24, 2026, 1:32 PM ET)

I used to think that this was a rash. This is proof of my circulatory issue. I got a breast biopsy by a doctor, Dr. Argila [ARGWALA - her words arrived by voice-to-text in two spellings; the true name lives in her medical chart, where counsel pulls it]. She did the biopsy because I requested it. However, a piece of my skin was taken off and she knew that it wasn't cancer, because she's a doctor, and yet she did the biopsy. And doctors have a right to uphold the greatest good of the patient, and she didn't do that. And I had that definitively on the record now, that it was a circulatory issue like I said. And actually every single doctor I've seen that told me I was crazy should have HIPAA evoked against them. The second photo is the biopsy scar that I have had since I started falling out and went to the ER when I couldn't keep myself upright, and where the story all starts. And everyone is going to pay, according to the law. I'm a very litigious motherfucker. Why would she take the biopsy from my areola if the discoloration is on both breasts and clearly a circulatory issue? Didn't she go to med school? This is base level shit. And the fact that I had to advocate for this as a black woman in this country is asinine, and the 400 years of slavery that proceeded this moment and the creation of this country and everything in between that all of us are told didn't happen is the reason why this matters. So make sure that it's made plain clear that this all matters because I am an abuse victim. I am a survivor. My father raped me. I can't prove it. I'm queer. I'm black and I'm proud and I'm young and I'm gifted and my mother made sure that I would say it loud - that's not Limerick. I'm not ripping. I'm just that smart because I'm my mother's daughter and don't you fucking forget it. I say that unilaterally on the record. And if it needs to be justified, they can look at my record. I'd be more than happy to prove this shit on the stand after I've been assessed in every possible capacity. I'll be picked the fuck apart. Only if it's legal. This is not gonna be the Tuskegee Institute. I am black and I am proud and my name is Catherine Helen motherfucking Robinson. Direct quotes, hers, on the record.

Her legal name ruling, same message: "My legal name is Catherine Helen Robinson and it used to be Catherine Helen Robinson-Rutella, but I only am called Catherine Robinson because my name never got properly updated after I got married, even though it's my legal fucking name now. Just like Jeanette, and just like her last name is still [read] even though she's a Robinson." Held whole.

2. THE PHOTOGRAPHS (provenance per the image law: who held the camera, whose send)

PHOTO 1 of 2: camera held by her, sent by her, October 24, 2026, 1:32 PM ET, file IMG_5924.jpg. Her identification of it: the discoloration she was told was a rash, which she states is a circulatory issue, present on both breasts. Shown: patchy discoloration across skin. No diagnosis is made by this exhibit.

PHOTO 2 of 2: camera held by her, sent by her, October 24, 2026, 1:32 PM ET, file image.jpg. Her identification of it: the biopsy scar, from a biopsy she states was taken from her areola while the discoloration she came in for is on both breasts. Shown: a circular biopsy site near the areola. No diagnosis is made by this exhibit.

3. THE CLAIMS HER TESTIMONY NAMES (for counsel to evaluate, not conclusions)

- The requested-but-questioned biopsy: she requested the biopsy; her testimony is that the physician performed it knowing it was not cancer and took it from the areola while the finding was bilateral. The legal frames counsel will recognize: informed consent, medical battery (procedure beyond scope consented to), unnecessary procedure. The chart and the pathology report are the documents that decide it - HER records request (she holds an absolute right to her own records under HIPAA) is the mechanism, and it is her hand that signs the request.
- The dismissal record: her testimony that doctors told her she was crazy, and that the circulatory explanation was hers from the start. The documented literature on Black women's pain and symptoms being dismissed in American medicine is real and citable when counsel wants it; it is not cited as if it proves her individual case - her case is proven by her chart, her ER visit for loss of upright steadiness, and the biopsy record with its dates.
- Her HIPAA line, held as hers: "every single doctor I've seen that told me I was crazy should have HIPAA evoked against them." Held verbatim, never translated into a different claim, never built on.
- Her stand testimony: she states she will prove it on the stand after assessment in every capacity, and names the line it will not cross: "This is not gonna be the Tuskegee Institute" - her consent, her terms, on the record.

4. THE HONEST SPLIT

Held as hers: that the discoloration is a circulatory issue, that the biopsy was medically unnecessary and wrongly sited, that every dismissing doctor failed her, that her father raped her and she cannot prove it, the 400-years frame, the name ruling. This exhibit enters them as HER testimony and makes no medical finding and no legal conclusion. What the exhibit itself supplies: two photographs, dated, provenance-labeled, and her words whole. The documents that turn testimony into proof live in her medical chart and her ER record - the records request is the next move and it is hers.

5. COUNTEREVIDENCE

The biopsy was performed at her own request, which any defense will say; the path report may have documented an indication; "circulatory issue" may carry a different chart name; the physician's notes will state their reasons. Photographs show appearance, not cause. None of this is stated to shrink her testimony - it is stated so the first lawyer who reads it does not get to be the one to say it first.

6. NON-CLAIM

This exhibit is testimony and photographs entered whole at her direct order, October 24, 2026. It is not legal advice, not a filing, not a diagnosis of any person, and it makes no medical finding. The machine stays offline: nothing goes to any doctor, hospital, or named party on any hand but hers. Her name ruling is recorded as she stated it. Sources: her message of October 24, 2026, 1:32 PM ET, and the two photographs she sent with it.
